Utah Valley Hospital has new medical director

PROVO — The appointment of Dr. E. Bruce McIff as new Utah Valley Hospital medical director was announced this week by the hospital's board of governors.

The position is the principal medical administrative post at the hospital and is second to the administrator in executive responsibilities, said Glen Overton, board chairman.

ADDRESS OF PERSON SUBMITTING SHEET _____

McIff succeeds Dr. Richard Call, who is retiring after 14 years as the hospital's medical director and 28 years with the hospital.

"Dr. McIff's job is to ensure, from a medical point of view, that the patients who come to Utah Valley Hospital receive the highest quality care and that medical standards at the hospital are above reproach," Overton said.

Other assignments directed by McIff include supporting the hospital's growth to meet the needs of the community and to maintain a high level of sophistication in staff and equipment, said Grant C. Burgon, hospital administrator.

"My role is to help ensure continuation of progress and to assist the hospital in realizing its destiny and its potential as the major medical center in central and southern Utah," McIff said.

"I intend to foster improved communications among the hospital, the medical staff and the public and to preserve and strengthen the private practice of medicine," he said.

McIff is a member of the board of governors, past chairman of the radiology department, president of the Utah State Radiological Society in 1982, and past president of the Utah Valley Hospital medical staff.

He is a certified radiologist and a senior member of the American Society of Neuroradiology and has held many professional positions.

McIff and his wife, Emmalou, have six children and live in Provo.
